The written response cites plenty of textual evidence (quoted excerpts, concrete details) to support a thorough analysis of what the text says explicitly, as well as inferences drawn from the text. The response effectively connects insights from specific details to an understanding of the text as a whole.	The written response cites sufficient textual evidence (quoted excerpts, concrete details) to support a reasonable analysis of what the text says explicitly (and may include inferences drawn from the text). The response points to specific insights gained from details in the text.	The written response provides some textual evidence (quotations, details) to support an adequate analysis of what the text states. However, more specific textual evidence or a more accurate analysis of what the text says is needed.	The written response does not provide textual evidence (quotations, details) to support its basic, possibly inaccurate, analysis of what the text says, or such evidence is minimal.	No written response was turned in to assess. No score can be awarded until it is turned in.
